

By the Grace of God, in the Year of Our Lord, Anno Domini MDCLXXVIII

I present unto you Master Delyone de Paula Canedo Filho, a man of noted learning and upright character. Though not yet possessed of great wealth, he is endowed with an unyielding spirit and rare persistence, moved by the sincere desire that every wrong be righted.

It is his nature never to seek another man ' s glory, but to merit solely by his own labour and deed. Though acquainted with the arts of war and able to endure as a seasoned captain, he never pursueth aggression, choosing instead the path of reason, of ethics, and of honour.

Amongst his neighbours, he is known as courteous in manner, steadfast in principle, and generous in compassion, and abideth no oppression of sex, race, or estate.

He believeth that man ' s dignity resteth upon the honest sustenance of himself and his household, and therefore he laboureth earnestly, though the present be arduous. Many hold him as a reforming spirit, for he feareth not to expose injustice, yet ever doth so with respect and clarity.

Thus, wheresoever he be present, one perceiveth in him not only the gentleman, but also the guardian of justice and of worthy human fellowship.

With the King ' s regard,

Your Servant in Sincerity,
Delyone de Paula Canedo Filho
